NEBRASKA ENVIRONMENTAL TRUST

Preserving Natural Nebraska™

The Nebraska Environmental Trust was established in 1992 to conserve, enhance and restore the natural environments of Nebraska. It was created on the conviction that a prosperous future is dependent upon a sound natural environment and that Nebraskans could collectively achieve real progress on real environmental issues if seed money were provided.

A recent Trust grant project provides an opportunity for community scientists to work alongside researchers to better understand the status of Nebraska's bumble bees. The state is home to nearly 20 different species of these charismatic and easily recognizable bees, many of which have been affected by the dramatic land use change seen in the Midwest over the last 150 years. The Nebraska Bumble Bee Atlas is spearheaded by the University of Nebraska–Lincoln and the Xerces Society for Invertebrate Conservation.

Pollinators play an essential role in sustaining the health of our environment by pollinating flowers in natural areas and contributing to successful harvests on farms. In recent years however, much of the recognition pollinators have received largely stems from the widespread decline of bees.

Declines of pollinator populations are alarming. Much attention has been given to the plight of the introduced European honey bee. Less well publicized, but no less important, is the parallel decline of native, wild bee populations, particularly bumble bees.

The Nebraska Bumble Bee Atlas will make use of the North American community-science platform Bumble Bee Watch to collect data. Participation is easy, fun and open to all ages, and training workshops will be held across the state in 2020 for anyone interested in joining the project.

“Whether you’re a career scientist or even just slightly interested in nature, community science provides an opportunity for the public and researchers to work together,” said Louise Lynch-O’Brien, Assistant Professor of Insect Biology at the University of Nebraska–Lincoln. “Right now, our pollinators in Nebraska and beyond are facing all sorts of problems. Research is how we get a handle on these problems. It is always exciting to see community science efforts, like the Nebraska Bumble Bee Atlas, in action. This is a chance for anyone to get off the sidelines and do something about pollinator declines and conservation efforts.”

Nebraska has a rich history of publishing bumble bee distribution information going back to the early 1960s. The Bumble Bee Atlas project will build upon this to better understand how bumble bee distributions have changed through time, including in rural areas of the state. Recent information on bumble bee distribution has been focused on places where people live and gathering information outside of these areas will be key to the success of the project. Doing so will take the cooperation of stakeholders throughout the state and a team of trained volunteers eager to collect the data.

The Nebraska Bumble Bee Atlas is funded through a grant from the Nebraska Environmental Trust. To learn more about the Nebraska Bumble Bee Atlas and how to get involved with the project, visit nebraskabumblebeeatlas.org.

WINNING WAYS

Bellwood Man Wins $1 Million Playing Powerball

Daniel Moore of Bellwood won $1 million playing Powerball from the Nebraska Lottery.

Moore purchased his winning ticket at Parkview One Stop at 102 Colfax St. in Schuyler. The ticket contained three quick pick plays, one of which matched five out of five winning numbers (18, 21, 24, 30, 60) but not the winning Powerball number (20) from the August 17 drawing.

Moore said he's a regular Powerball player and was checking tickets in his truck after work when he discovered he'd won. Moore said he yelled "Thank you," upon discovering he'd hit the $1 million prize.

"I checked them at the store and the clerk's eyes got really big," he said.

Moore said he's planning on using his winnings to pay off his house and a couple of vehicles, but there's something he wants to do that's a little closer to his heart.

Moore's father died in the spring and he's wanted to buy his dad's excavating business from his mother.

"Dad was looking down on you," Moore's mother told him after his win.
